

Rose will talk about the different institutional arrangements for undertaking regulation and policy development, drawing on her experience in a number of Australian jurisdictions and in Hong Kong. She will also outline the practical contribution that law enforcers can make to the policy development process and the consequences where policy makers do not pay sufficient attention to the practical impediments to implementation.